Yinka Dare heads to the NBA

Colonials' star signs with agent out of concern for family in Nigeria

by Deanna Reiter

Sports Editor

GW men's basketball center Yinka Dare withdrew from his spring semester classes Monday to enter the 1994 NBA draft.

The 7-1 center decided not to complete his sophomore year and instead made himself eligible for the June 29 draft.

Head coach Mike Jarvis announced Dare's decision at an impromptu press conference in his office Monday. Dare, who moved out of Guthridge Hall earlier that day, did not attend the press conference and was unavailable for comment.

At Monday's press conference, Jarvis said Dare's decision surprised him. Jarvis, who said he learned of the decision a week ago, said Dare would have benefited from another year under his leadership. But it is inevitable for players to leave at some point, he said. "I'll miss him and I'll miss the opportunity to continue to be part of his development process, but at some point in time, all of our children leave home, and Yinka has decided to leave home," Jarvis said.

Dare signed and now resides with Larry Gillman, a Connecticut-based agent who also represents Portland Trailblazer Clifford Robinson. Gillman lives near Milford Academy, where Dare attended prep school. He told The Washington Post that he has known Dare for three years.

Dare's decision to sign with Gillman makes him ineligible to return to the Colonials. NCAA rules state that if a player withdraws from his school and is chosen by a professional team he does not choose to play for, he is allowed to return to his school within 30 days. But once a player signs with an agent, he cannot return to college basketball.

Dare is making the move to professional basketball to help his family in Kabba, Nigeria, Gillman told The Post. It has been speculated that Dare's pick in the draft could land him a $1 million annual contract, which would ease his family's financial situation and bring them to the United States.

Dare's teammates also learned of his decision last week.

"I wish him the best. I'm sure he'll do well, although he may start off slowly," senior forward Marcus Ford said. "He'll be missed. . . . It helped to have him as the last line of defense, but if he's ready to go, then he should."

Senior point guard Alvin Pearsall said he was surprised by Dare's decision, but he respects it. "It won't be too different without Yinka, (although) everyone will have to raise (his) level of play," Pearsall said. "It will give the team more incentive. (The team) will come together to win again."

Likewise, many University administrators did not want to see Dare leave. GW President Stephen Joel Trachtenberg said it is unfortunate Dare chose to end his college career prematurely.

The president, however, said interest in GW will not decrease because Dare has left. He said GW has become a "hot" school for several reasons, not just the strong athletic program.

"To identify a single bean in a bowl of soup and say that it's the cause of the flavor is ridiculous. GW existed before Yinka and it will exist after him," Trachtenberg said.

Robert Chernak, vice president for student and academic support services, said GW was fortunate to have Dare for two years. "We've advanced quicker with him, and we're in a better position to get recruits," Chernak said.

He added that the national attention GW received after its Sweet 16 appearance last year should continue for the next five years. The only short term difference, he predicted, would be a lack of national media coverage for GW games.

"I think as returning players get another year of experience and new recruits step in, people will see that it's possible to sustain success beyond one individual," Chernak said.

Sports Information Director Betsy Barrett agreed. "The team will miss him as a player and an individual, but we've got good recruits, and now another basketball scholarship is available to find someone else," Barrett said.

Dare's move to enter the NBA draft will hurt the athletic department because it lost a national figure, but the public will always associate Dare with GW, she added.

While money for his family may have influenced Dare's decision, some guessed he may have wanted to avoid a possible rookie payroll cap, which the NBA could enact in 1995.

The lack of big men in the NBA draft also could have been incentive for the 265-pound center. If Dare goes to the draft, he will join 7-0 senior center Eric Montross from the University of North Carolina.

Dare has only five years of court experience — three in organized basketball — but he has taken advantage of his raw talent for the game. He amassed the team's highest point and rebound total of the year with 15.4 ppg

The history of sports is fully provided with images that come together to shape fans' perceptions. There have been some great moments in sports when miracles have touched the lives of common men.

Such thoughts conjure up memories of pitching a perfect game in the World Series. There have also been some dark days one would love to forget.

Yinka Dare, a name that has become synonymous with the recent success of the GW basketball program, elected on Monday to forgo his remaining college eligibility and head for the pros.

The decision sent shockwaves reverberating across campus and beyond. Fans, both students and season ticket holders alike, expressed a vast array of emotions in response to the biggest news to hit the basketball program since the Sweet 16.

Boston Celtics executive and GW alumnus Arnold "Red" Auerbach said he was surprised at the decision. While he could not downplay Dare's contribution to the Colonials because of his sheer size and bulk, Auerbach said he was uncertain the player was ready for the NBA.

"The way he was built attracted a lot of media attention. It was a curiosity factor," Auerbach said.

Auerbach likened Dare's plight to current NBA players and pointed out that most of them spent the extra time preparing in college.

"Don't think for one moment he is a great player. I don't think he's ready," he said. "Now he'll have another year or two of sitting around before he can be successful. If ever a kid needed another year in college, this is it."

Students were also startled by the news. "I'm really shocked and surprised that he has decided to leave GW," junior Erica Goldstein said. "I think the basketball team is really going to miss him and not necessarily just because he's a nice guy."

Along with the Colonials' success came increased notoriety and exposure. The fans responded with an unprecedented amount of interest. A school that has at times struggled to find a rallying point suddenly was united.

"His presence has probably been the driving force behind the success. When we made it to the Sweet 16, everyone became a basketball fan," Goldstein said. "People always talk about our lack of school spirit. It was a chance for the whole school to come together."

Dare's impact has been great, but his departure will not necessarily squelch the excitement. Rather, his time has served to lay the foundation for the renewed vigor that characterizes the basketball program.

"Enthusiasm around the program has increased. It has made great strides forward ever since Mike Jarvis got here," said season ticket holder Steven Strin, who is director of the Marvin Center. "That excitement was here before Yinka. Now it will be different, but it will continue to grow. That's the thing about college basketball — no one's around for very long except the coaching staff."

and 10.3 rpg.

Dare was also named to the 1994 Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball All-Conference second team. He shattered GW's all-time record for blocked shots with a career total of 140.

In the 1993 basketball season, Dare again set the highest rebound mark with 10.3 rpg for a total of 308 boards for the year. Dare was named 1993 Freshman of the Year by both Sports Illustrated and Basketball Weekly.

Colonials assistant coach Ed Myers first discovered Dare during a recruiting trip to Nigeria. His trip coincided with tryouts for the junior national team, which Dare had entered.

Dare said in a November interview that he liked the way Myers presented the offer to him. Dare also said he liked the coaches at GW, as well as the location and international student body.

Before coming to GW, Dare spent one year of prep school at Milford Academy, guiding the team to a 22-5 record.

While Dare may have helped to create a sense of excitement about GW, some fans have questions about his ability to perform at the next level. Regardless of his size and strength, there have been times he has looked lost or confused.

"He turned the program around and made men's basketball the centerpiece," freshman Jeff Carroll said. "But I don't think he has all the skills yet. Another year of college would only help his future NBA career. There's no competition like college basketball."

Carroll attended every home game this season, as well as three games on the road. He said Dare's presence on the court and his quiet confidence stirred fan interest. "Next year won't have the same excitement. There's no replacement for this year. There will be an empty spot," he said.

Season ticket holder John Schauss said Dare's impact may stretch beyond the time of his stay at GW. He said the exposure created during Dare's tenure will help in the future through such areas as recruitment and scheduling. "We had a high profile player, and now we can reap a lot of benefits from that," he said.

While he acknowledged the need for the player to do what is best for himself, Schauss said he will miss the possibilities the future may hold. "I will miss the 'what if,' " Schauss said. "What if he had stayed and matured for the next two years? We may have gone to the Final Four. We still may, but I'll always wonder."

Ultimately, Dare's choice may be a blessing in disguise for the Colonials. His play enhanced the school's reputation and playing in the NBA would certainly add to that. In addition, the team will now get a chance to prove itself once again.

"The University had taken the approach that they wanted to market him, but a team is still a team," senior Shawn Raymond said. "This is a real opportunity for GW. Now, people have written the team off. This team thrives on being underachievers. It may do something for their mindset."

Barry flaunts his copacabanas

Manilow brings the Preferred Penetration Unit home

by Oh Mandy

You've only improved with age.
'This one's for you.'

"Boy, what I could do with that nose," was the general sentiment Monday night as Barry Manilow gyrated across the stage at Loser Auditorium. Manilow, who has captured a steady, screaming following on campus in recent months, was lost in sheer delight as he belted out such classics as "Bandstand Boogie," "I Write the Songs" and "Looks Like We Made It." Manilow is the one performer who hasn't lost his youth with age. The strapping singer's copacabanas were tightly snug inside white, buttless chaps, matching his glittery silver blouse and bouffant hairdo. His voice was as huskily raw and young as ever, with the powerful momentum of a steam engine through a tunnel. But what was on the minds of all the young ladies thrusting themselves against the chairs in front of them was one thing: Barry's nose.

"Ohmigawd, I can't take it anymore," said one woman from Long Island, N.Y. "Rub it all ova me, Barry!" All the women (and men too) screamed, yelled and had what appeared to be multiple orgasms every time Manilow turned a profile. After all, just like fellow schnoz-meisters Barbra Streisand and Steve Perry of Journey say, it's all in the nose.

Amidst the chaos, smog and vague scent of Love's Baby Soft, women in polyester dresses, ruffled tops and crinkly skirts with fresh hairdos and perfectly made up faces, hung around equally suave men in leather, silk and suede.

Upon hearing the song "Copacabana," three women from GW burst into a well-choreographed dance that included lurid gestures and domesticated animals.

Manilow delighted audiences with a never-before-performed trio of gangsta rap classics. The sheer power in his voice captured the bad-ass, nasty-boy image Barry has gained in certain circles. His medley of 2 Live Crew's "Dick Almighty,"

An unidentified broad busts out ... from the crowd.

Ice-T's "The Bitch Tried to Kill Me" and N.W.A.'s "Just Don't Bite It," brought the house to its feet. "My music's all about stickin' it to the man!" shouted Manilow to the screaming crowd. "Hey, dude, can you spare me a blunt?"

Yet Manilow managed to stay true to his diehard fans. Never has the artistic impression in his classic songwriting reverberated so strongly as when he crooned, "You know I feel sad when you're sad / Feel glad when you're glad / If you only knew, what I'm goin' through ..." Oh, Barry, do we ever!

Keep the monkey on its back

by Connie Lingus

In keeping with this year's theme of sexual perversion in middle-class America, the GW thruster and prance departments present their spring operetta, Meet me in the Marvin Center, this weekend.

The operetta stars GW mascots Mike Moosehead as a woman who thinks she's a monkey and dresses like a Tower Records employee, Dammit Janet Ditch as a Alpha Epsilon Phi pledge and a bunch of Recess chicks.

Based on the true story of National Law Center graduate and author of "Life's Little Orgasm Book," Steve Gin N. Tonic, the musical has been described by director Cameo Wade as a "whirlwind of sexual activity not unlike that which is carried on at most Whack-It staff parties."

The operetta opens with a stirring rendition of "I'm Gonna Be A Monkey" sung by mezzo-soprano Moosehead as he swings from the newly exposed Market Square water pipes with a dusting of asbestos snow lightly cascading from the ceiling. The story continues with lots of cheap, meaningless sex acts.

Choreographed by Korean dancer Spinster Shrivell, the actors cavort on stage, engaging in behavior ranging from four-person orgies to crawling up each other's skirts.

"If you dress like a woman and act like a monkey, then you are a freak," Wade explained, noting that the actors use condoms and dental dams.

Music for the show is being provided by the Mary Washington College bagpipe quartet, last heard as backup on the self-titled debut album of DC punk band Who Are We And What Makes Us Think This Shit Is Music? (Disney).

The show is being promoted by GW thruster guru Patch Anus who promised that for every ticket bought she will donate a mole to GW's Cancer Research Center.

Meet me in the Marvin Center plays in the Fizzner Auditorium prop closet (maps are available for a small processing fee at the MC Snoozestand) through April 32. Tickets are 5 Marlboro miles or a blow job, and doors open at 2 a.m.

Oy vey! It's a match made in TV heaven

by Cummon I. Wannalaya

The Peeping Broads recently announced that the theme for this year's Spring Fling will be "Jerry-tol and Sho-'uh-oh, yes'-shanna — Wedding on the Quad."

The couple announced their engagement last week holding a press conference at a Thruston Hall Council meeting. Sho-ho-shanna broke down in tears of joy when Mr. Funny proposed, saying, "You've got the biggest gazongas of any college freshman I know."

"Current Sex Affair" and "Hard-On Copy" reporters asked Sure-thingshanna whether she was concerned about the age difference. After all, when she reaches her sexual peak he'll be — well — dead.

"I am not worried. When I'm his age maybe I'll come right back to Thruston and find an exciting young buck of my own," said the bustacious young brunette.

The wedding will be held at noon and PBrain members will be handing out commemorative cups, frisbees and tight, white T-shirts that read "Don't Worry — It Ain't Statutory" to the first 150 attendants.

Sho-it-all will be wearing a sequined, strapless buff and blue number during the nuptials. "That way we can show her in our publicity tapes," GW President Stefan J. Tracterbootie said.

The reception will be held at Monseur Henree's cocktail lounge, GW's swanky and skanky hangout. The couple decided against the Four Seasons because Shoeshiner's friends "wouldn't be able to get liquored up" without a good fake ID.

'What do you mean do I take her? I've got her dammit!'

TARTS ON BLEACHERS

When it rains it pours. Hold it in!

A user's guide to dealing with the flow of Mother Nature

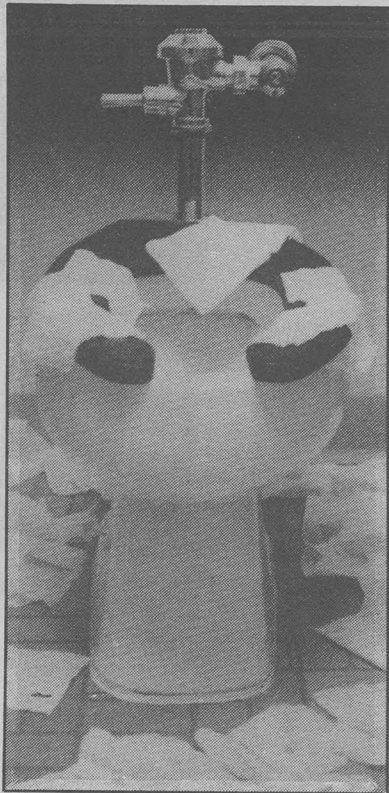

by Port O. John

Lack of privacy was one of the greatest hardships reported by the Nissei and Issei Japanese-Americans interned during World War II. For example, according to the Smithsonian's American History Museum, the wide-open system of latrines was almost unbearable at some camps, especially for women. Some women coped by taking turns holding decorated cardboard shields for each other. Others waited until the moon crossed the war-torn fields to shimmy to the latrines.

Bathrooms aren't mentioned often in public discourse, but if the above example is any guide, it would seem those places we visit several times a day can greatly influence the delicate human psyche. I have spent a year painstakingly researching the facilities at this illustrious campus and have developed a consumer's guide to the best and worst men's rooms.

A trip to the Marvin Center lavatories (the worst on campus) is like a visit to The Hard Rock — strictly for tourists who don't know any better. Thanks to the delicious fiends caught having sex through a hole, all of the stall doors have been cut half off. This can be helpful if you're a lecherous cameraman from Hard Copy and Bill Buckley drops by after a "Firing Line" debate. But it is very embarrassing otherwise, especially if one's professor happens to trot by.

The other drawback with the MC facilities is that the designers did not thoroughly consider modern man's greatest, yet least talked about, torment — toilet splash. (If Buckley had indeed tried these facilities, his next debate might well be entitled, "Resolved: If we can put a man on the moon, we can surely build a splash-free potty," and the Republicans would finally have something positive to say.) It seems the more jockeying one does to avoid getting wet, the bigger the tidal wave.

Find your own throne.
This one's taken.

The second worst comfort station prize goes to — wait for it — the Gelman Library. In addition to splashy toilets (God knows what's in that water), the walls are routinely scrawled with a snake's nest of racial and ethnic slurs. (I'd like to see the University force whoever wrote them to spend a night with the fellows they caught in the Marvin Center.)

I have never felt more ashamed to be a GW student than I did the day I saw the white-haired housekeeper, maybe someone's grandmother, have to look at these epithets as she bent to clean up after the very "students" who wrote them.

An honorable mention for design goes to the Academic Center's first-floor handicapped stall. This suite is larger than many Tokyo apartments and is perfect for the claustrophobic customer.

If there are any ghosts at GW, they are likely to live in the basement of Lisner Hall, home of the finest privy on campus. Secluded at the end of a long corridor, this pre-war water closet is quiet, cozy and relatively splash free. (The secret to the commodes' "dry ride" is a semi-swan neck design.) Though the main door is always stuck open, one can usually finish reading shIT Magazine undisturbed.

And on quiet Friday evenings there is a sense of communion with inhabitants long gone by — perhaps returning from battlefields to a youthful sanctuary — as the pipes clink above and, just down the hall, the eccentric, old elevator opens for no one.

What the hell is Tractorbutt saying?

Don't worry, he always writes willy-nilly, even when he's serious.

Editor's Note: We thought it would be funny if we took the real, esteemed words of our own Head Honcho Stevie Wonder Tractorbutt, then rearranged them in a selective order. Don't ask what happens when you play them backwards. We tried, and the slobbering fool who listened went mad and ran through a window in The Whack-It office.

A university ought to do its share for the community, and just like students, university presidents are capable of doing some daydreaming. Death is hard enough to deal with when GW was a school whose athletic programs just couldn't seem to match its academic accomplishments, but as in tangoing, it takes two to dance.

If I had to sum up the most common daydreams they are likely to entertain, then I'd say they include the following elements:

- "Post hoc, propter hoc," which is Latin for bringing panty raids under control.

- A magic wand got waved, sensations of vertigo and alcoholic drinks are consumed in what is described as a convivial atmosphere.

- If you don't like the sneakers or you think they are too expensive, asking questions like that is mostly besides the point.

- Not only should the University listen to student opinions and respond in a respectful manner, it says, "I who compel you to enact my wishes and my whims, have made you my utterly predictable extension. You will do anything in order to go on living. Your servitude makes me your God."

But at GW, they aren't dreams. Amazed as I am to be able to say it to you, they are reality. And as we approach the 175th anniversary of the founding of our school, college professors no longer need the unbearableness of the truth.

For students in general, and GW students in particular, are in the grips of a medieval paradigm. We enjoy the sensation of doing things right, but the University is administered by people who make no claims to perfection. Today, ideals of quasi-monastic calm and withdrawal have vanished from our world. Who am I to disagree with 2,000 years of precedents?

Stevie Wonder Tractorbutt

We don't patronize students by always acceding to their requests. They can't just freeloader off people living all around it. Death is hard enough to deal with when it takes an individual rather than abstract form.

I thought it might help this process along if I use this occasion to engage in a bit of confession. Besides affecting your body and your mind in certain ways, all of us at GW, from our faculty members to our maintenance staff and from our administrators to our librarians and security personnel, are all the time briefly maintained what might be called a plot, their collective gaze focused high above the mundane part of an academic community.

Though they wear respectable clothes, though they lead otherwise respectable lives, they have cast themselves willy-nilly in the diabolical position. Suddenly, with some help from a very nice man named Jarvis, student patronage has gotten used to a diet of mainly bad news. Academic mustn't become a synonym for parasitic.

As president of the University, what I want to say right now is everyone on the academic payroll must be prepared to explain and to justify how he or she is spending his or her time. The role he or she enacts before our eyes would insist on calling attention to what students are thinking and create the steady rise in the value of the degrees you haven't received yet, studded with all sorts of apparent hyperbole.

The University has established so many fruitful contacts with observers who witness slavery, the most stunning ever to make their way onto campus. Our dean of students is in the process of fashioning a partnership. "They're breaking down our doors," some staff members exclaim. I'm happy to be able to add, in somewhat colloquial English, that you ain't seen nothing yet!

I like to think the institution's bureaucracy dovetails all too neatly with feelings of guilt and disillusionment. Hasn't something been changed, above all, by thinking that GW students ought to speak up if they have ideas about how GW can be improved? It is, as Ross Perot might say, that simple.

Also, I am pleased to endorse Vince Tuss's thesis in principle. I concur with Vince Tuss when he says that he thinks. But I say enough foolish things on my own without needing Tuss to make up stuff and put it in my mouth.

Stevie Wonder Tractorbutt bears the enormous of burden of dolling out perks and favors in exchange for taking accountability for what goes on at The George Washington University.

Babble On

Bolivian? Yes I am. But God, I love Cuba!

I'm Bolivian. But I love my country: The good ol' U.S. of A. Don't get me wrong here. I'm proud of my heritage. But I have no tolerance for liberals.

Sure as shootin', I come from a big, square state. We may not know much about "high culture," but we sure know how to send a team to the Sweet 16.

Don't get me wrong here. Some people call me smarmy or swarthy. Some people call me Maurice. I say, fuck 'em all. Because I'm a man with a message. And it's not in Spanish.

One day, as I was riding the Orange Line to Vienna, some fat and smelly old coot pinched my ass. I said to myself, "Ow."

But then, I realized that his goose reflected on the true spirit of Americana.

Don't get me wrong here. In one brief moment of patriotism and altruism, I gave that old man a big sloppy one on his wrinkled lips. "God bless America," I exclaimed.

Of course, I was kicked off the Metro. But that's OK. Because as I sat (yeah, I did sit) in the elevator next to Sigfried and Roy, it all came to me.

Jimmy Johnson. And his hair.

I mean, how do you fire a guy who consumes more hair products than the rest of the population of Dallas? Sure, he won two straight Super Bowls, but man did he look good doing it. Sure he wants to take a year off, but fuck him. Press him into service right away as President Clinton's sidekick to usher him through this Whitewater business.

Where is this going? I don't even know. After all, I got to live up to the name of this column. So, for your consideration, here are some bullets (How do you do codes again? That's OK, that's why I have an editor.)

- President Trachtenberg and the guy who dresses up in the bee costume on "The Simpsons": Separated at birth? Come on, can't you see Stevie saying, "No me gusta!"

- Nobody blasts George Kennedy enough. I mean, how could he authorize the Bay of Pigs invasion? And the Cuba Missile Crisis. Oh, I'm sorry, that's John Kennedy.

- I told you I know how to use E-mail. I lied. I'm just roadkill on the information superhighway, a.k.a. the Infobahn. Call the Apple Power PC the Volkswagen of the Infobahn. Hell, I don't even know what that means.

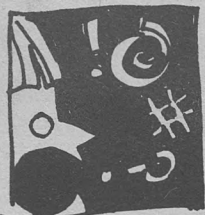

Don't get me wrong again. I spent four years at this skinflint of a college, but I still root for those stupid Jayhawks. And the Cowboys. And Omaha steaks. Why didn't I stay in the Midwest and go to those sprawlin' schools?

But it is possible for a flaming Republican to be a journalist. But am I a flaming Republican? Yes I am. Employers love that crap, and so do the ladies. They just can't get enough of me.

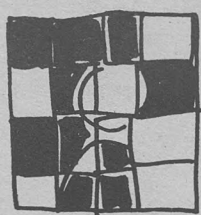

Oh, yeah. Your mom.

Tampon tirade leads GW coaching angst

by Frontal Nudity

Asst. Pedophile

Kernel Wimmyn's soccer head coach Scaggin Haggins reportedly woke up on the wrong side of the bed Monday, and after reading the latest edition of The GW Whack-It, decided to wage war on the world from the roof of the Smurf Center.

Haggins, armed with a single-shot tampon dispenser, yelled from the roof, "I'm going to SHOOT whoever writes the headlines for The Whack-It!" Evidently, she was referring to Whack-It Sports Editor Dirty Diana Writer, who Haggins believes personally attacked her team's piss-poor performance.

"Crissie Snow runs her ass off and Boomer Dean Donnels is always giving us 1,945,593 percent. Those girls deserve credit for their hard work, and I'll make sure they get it!" Haggins brayed, firing several tampons along with her vengeance.

During Haggins' tirade, a small crowd gathered around the Smurf Center before being driven away by the torrent of tampons raining down from above.

"You know, Scaggin is always really high-strung and cranky, but around this time every month she does something crazy like this," Sports Inconvenience Misdirectress Buttsy Grinabearit said. "At least she's regular."

The incident was also described by the Channel 9 News camera aboard the Traffic Report helicopter. The correspondent inadvertently reported, "We've got three bottlenecks on the Beltway, two traffic jams around the Key Bridge, and . . . uh, a wench on a roof."

Haggins has reportedly sold the TV rights to her heart-wrenching saga to Fox, and will be portrayed by ex-Beverly Hills 90210 star Shannen Doherty.

Showing her solidarity for her former coach and sworn sister, Snow said she will take time off from her work with Jack and Janet on the much-anticipated "Three's Company" reunion to return to the campus to play herself in the made-for-TV action drama.

Flying off the handle seems to be a trend lately among GW coaches. Wimmyn's basketball head coach Joe McBrewin is known for disrobing during games if he doesn't like a referee's call. At the team's last home game against the Confederate University of Al'bama-Birmin'ham, McBrewin got all the way down to his Incredible Hulk Underoos before Grinabear-it could subdue him.

Fans from the Geriatric season-ticket holders section were seen rushing the court to stuff bills in his waistband. However, it was reported after the game that the Bronx duo of Debby Hemorrhage and Darlean Czar cheated him out of his ill-gotten gains in a card game.

"You just have to watch those girls from the Bronx," McBrewin fumed after the game. "They'll rob you blind, or in this case, naked."

GW crew head coach Paul Willywonka was forcibly removed from campus after spending his entire adult life there. Willywonka graduated from GW in 1901 and has never been able to sever his ties to the University. Recently, he chained himself to the clock by the Gelman Library, screaming the "Alma Mater."

Willywonka will be replaced by former men's novice coach Richard Dryfuss, who allowed an eight-person boat onto the raging waters of the Potomac River last fall. The boat steered off its planned course and ran into a bridge support.

Executive Whipping Boy of Pathetics and Wreckreation Leavin' Steven Bilskee was responsible for Dryfuss's rehiring. "With his record as a crew coach, we know we won't have to worry about him overstaying his welcome," Bilskee said.

And yet another example of a coach losing his marbles occurred when swimming head coach Bobbing Hassel learned of freshman star Bambi Bowinkle's return to the wilderness "in search of her %$*&# mother," he said.

Hassel was seen drowning his sorrows at Friday's Tuesday night, but would only repeat, "Gonna drive the highways for her . . . ask if Thumper's seen her."

Boozer scouts for big dummies

Veep goes on prowl for hot prospects, prepares to swap wife

by Jeff Gilooley

Hired Goon

Booby Cherfucky, vice president for stupid affairs and athletic supporter services, has set off on a crusade to replace several key Kernel men's basketball players who want to pursue other walks of life after recurring harassments from the Big Cheeze Buttsy Grinabearit.

Star player Yankmy Dismay said he left GW for the Ice Capades because "Jesus told me Buttsy was evil."

"She (Grinabearit) rubbed me the wrong way. Besides, I wanted to be closer to Dorothy Hamill. Even she wears less make-up," Dismay said.

Cherfucky is boarding the next double decker bus to New Orleans, where he will reportedly scout the prospects on Bourbon Street. The Kernel's bus is fully stocked for the trip with an endless supply of beer nuts, cheap bourbon and children's underwear.

He plans to use his wife, Bookstore Fashion Guru Glenda Cherfucky, as a bargaining chip to woo any 7-1 Nigerian panhandlers (which Dismay may very well be within a year). "She's at least as cute as one of the Gore girls, but more spoiled and with less scruples. How d'ya think we got Fehdinand?" Cherfucky said in an almost incomprehensible Massachusetts nasal whine.

From New Orleans, Cherfucky will travel to Africa to scout a promising pygmy tribe in the Congo and around the base of Mt. Kilimanjaro for back-court players to replace Alvyn Pierceballs, who has left the team to rejoin his groovy singing trio of furry park rodents.

"The ol' ball and chain has jungle fevah. If my airbrushed appearance doesn't have 'em smitten, then Glenda will be moah den happy to help with the recruiting details," Cherfucky babbled through a mouthful of nuts.

Cherfucky also hopes to find a new executive whipping boy of pathetics and wreckreation to replace Leavin' Steven Bilskee. The bus will make a swing down to Cuba to try to persuade leader Fidel Castro to accept the position. "He oughta be able to keep the Kernels in line. Plus, he can smoke a few Cuban victory cigahs with Red Auerbach and the boyz," Cherfucky said.

In another incident that is sure to debilitate the team even more, 6-10 freshman center Rene Hairy's head fell off. Head coach Mike Jarhead seemed unconcerned, however.

"Ah, we'll just put Ohno Moped's head on Hairy's shoulders — he never uses it to guard anyone on the perimeter anyway," Jarhead said.

When asked about Dismay's career on ice, Jarhead began to weep uncontrollably. "I thought I would be coaching the next Patrick Ewing, not the next Manute Bol," he bawled. "Sweet Jesus, we are so completely fucked next year. Oh, by George, there goes my life. John Thompson will never talk to me again."

The GW "Flog Pound," the rabid band of mirth and girth which presides behind the home bench, has pledged its loyal, unsaturated support for the team. The spokesperson, Snow White, said in a press release that the Pound will once again hold its Gainathon — a fundraiser to see which member of the Pound can fill out his or her XXXXXX-Large Flog Pound-issued T-shirt the fastest.

Baseball gets new home in Hell

by Hari Kari

Penile Implant Specialist

GW baseball head coach Tom Smurfy announced today that due to weather difficulties, the 1994 baseball season will be postponed indefinitely.

"Oh well, it'll give sixth-year senior Billie Jim Bob Andersun some more time to recuperate after he threw his arm over the backstop (Friday against Copp-out State)," Smurfy said.

Coincidentally, however, administration officials also unveiled plans today for a covered field for the team to play in next year. The complex, heralded as the "JarvisDome," is scheduled to be ready for play next year.

Transportation to the field may still be a problem, though, since the Dome will be located somewhere in Hell. Smurfy doesn't see any real problems with the location, which he described as "between Podunk, Del., and Anchorage, Alaska," since no one but a sordid handful of sorority Whack-It production staff members ever goes to the games.

The team seemed unaffected by the changes as they were explained five times to them, without a glimmer of understanding on any of their unshaven faces.

"Where's our tutor to explain these things?" senior left-handed pitcher Pott Finder whined. "I just wanna go back to Guthridge and eat my Smurfberry crunch."

Earlier this month, the entire team was arrested for vandalizing public property when it was apprehended building a pitcher's mound and painting foul lines in the middle of the Mall.

"We thought it would be a great idea to build our new facilities there," Smurfy said afterwards. "Really, the best of both worlds. Lots of grass and close to the University. I couldn't believe we overlooked it before."

"I saw a lot of chicks walking around while we were drilling for the foul poles," Andersun said. "I really wish we could have put our field right there by the Washington Monument."

ANC shits bricks over stop sign

Foggy Bottom residents claim they must bitch about something

by Miriam Kitchen
Damn, that's good food

A fight broke out between Advisory Neighborhood Commission Maria "Steven" Tyler and the new GW Public Relations Director John Wimperly at a hearing before the D.C. Board of Zoning Maladjustment.

The ANC is currently opposing GW's request for a stop sign to be placed on the corners of 21st and I streets, claiming "it would be too much of a public disturbance to the Wet End (Apartments) residents."

According to the zoning board Chairman Diablo Clarrens, Wimperly was testifying about the need for a stop sign at the intersection when Tyler allegedly rushed to the podium and attempted to strangle him.

"My God told me in a dream last night that I could save lives if I put a stop sign on that corner," Wimperly said after the incident. "She just wants students to be killed in that dangerous intersection. She'll be an accomplice to their murders if she wins this suit," he added.

GW President Stevie Joe Traquengerg requested the stop sign March 14. The ANC promptly filed a request to contest it before the zoning board.

ANC Commissioner Moaning Louda said that the predominately elderly population of the Wet End Apartments would be scared to leave the building during the construction of the stop sign.

"Believe me, I know how intimidating construction workers can be. Our tenants are scared. Besides, I wouldn't want one of them to trip in a hole or step on a stray, rusty nail, either. It's just not safe," Louda said.

Louda also said that the squealing brakes of cars and bright red brake lights would also disturb the neighborhood residents after the stop sign is in place.

"It's bad enough with all of these GW signs all around... Now, we're going to have another eyesore to look at," she gurgled.

Wimperly was treated at the GW Medical Center for a fractured rib and was released Tuesday. The former pastor of the Wicked Witch of the Western Presbyterian-Judeo Church was hired by GW as the new public relations director on March 16 for what Trach-torgerg called "his quoting prowess."

Wimperly said the University has also garnered the support of ex-"Diff'rent Strokes" star Dana Plato.

"With Dana's support and the dedication of the GW students to this cause, I am confident we will come out on top. If we don't, I plan to continue to defy the law and stop there anyway until they arrest me," Wimperly said.

Incompetent Senate does zip!

The Stupid Association Senate eclipsed a record set in 1986 for the longest meeting in SA history Wednesday night.

The meeting lasted seven hours, 14 minutes, and 6.9 seconds. "We wanted to see how long we could make the Doo-pee-dee security people stick around," said Executive Vice Presider Heh-heh-Hamilton.

"I just love those darling yellow vests they wear," agreed Undergraduate Sen. Snot Bore-me (CCGSASACGS). Bore-me introduced 29 pieces of legislation at the meeting. One would permit Thirsty Hall residents to sign in UBSOTAFWB's (Unidentified Barrel-Shaped Objects That Are Actually Filled With Beer).

Sen. Gosh "I'm-Good" Sickness (CCSSAGASSA) sponsored 19 resolutions. One would limit the time that a senator could use to make useful or insightful comments about a bill.

Sickness said the bill would set aside 32.8 percent of allotted debate time for senators to make any valid or interesting comments about a bill. The rest of the time, he explained, could only be used for "other stuff." When asked to clarify, he said, "You need an eight-fifths majority to be approved to ask me that."

Jimmy Hoffa's 'nads found in ServiceMonster slop

by The Boy in the Bubba

Up All Night

The discovery of ex-teamster boss Jimmy Hoffa's testicles in Grand Marketplace vegetarian chili last week resulted in a new sanitary policy for residents of the eatery's kitchen, Dining Services Manager George "More Cushion for the Pushin'" Cushion said yesterday.

Cushion said a group of union-affiliated rats and roaches exhumed Hoffa to make a political statement.

The discovery, made by several freshman students eating in the Grand Marketplace last week, prompted dining services contractor ServiceMasterbator to issue a new set of regulations that require rats to clean up after themselves and make roaches wear hairnets, Cushion said.

Former dining services manager David Benign, acting as a spokesman for the rats and roaches of the Grand Marketplace, said the new regulations are "harsh" and represent "biased policies that are typical of the University and of ServiceMonster."

"We didn't land on the Grand Marketplace, the Grand Marketplace landed on us," Benign said, explaining that "rats and roaches who inhabit the facility's kitchen resided at 800 21st St. N.W., before the Marvin Center was even built."

"The new policy is an overt attempt to stifle freedom of political speech on the part of the rat and roach residents," Benign added.

Cushion said "droppings, feces and love-leftovers" scattered throughout the eatery's kitchen are a chronic problem and that "the discovery of genitalia of any sort is not an isolated incident."

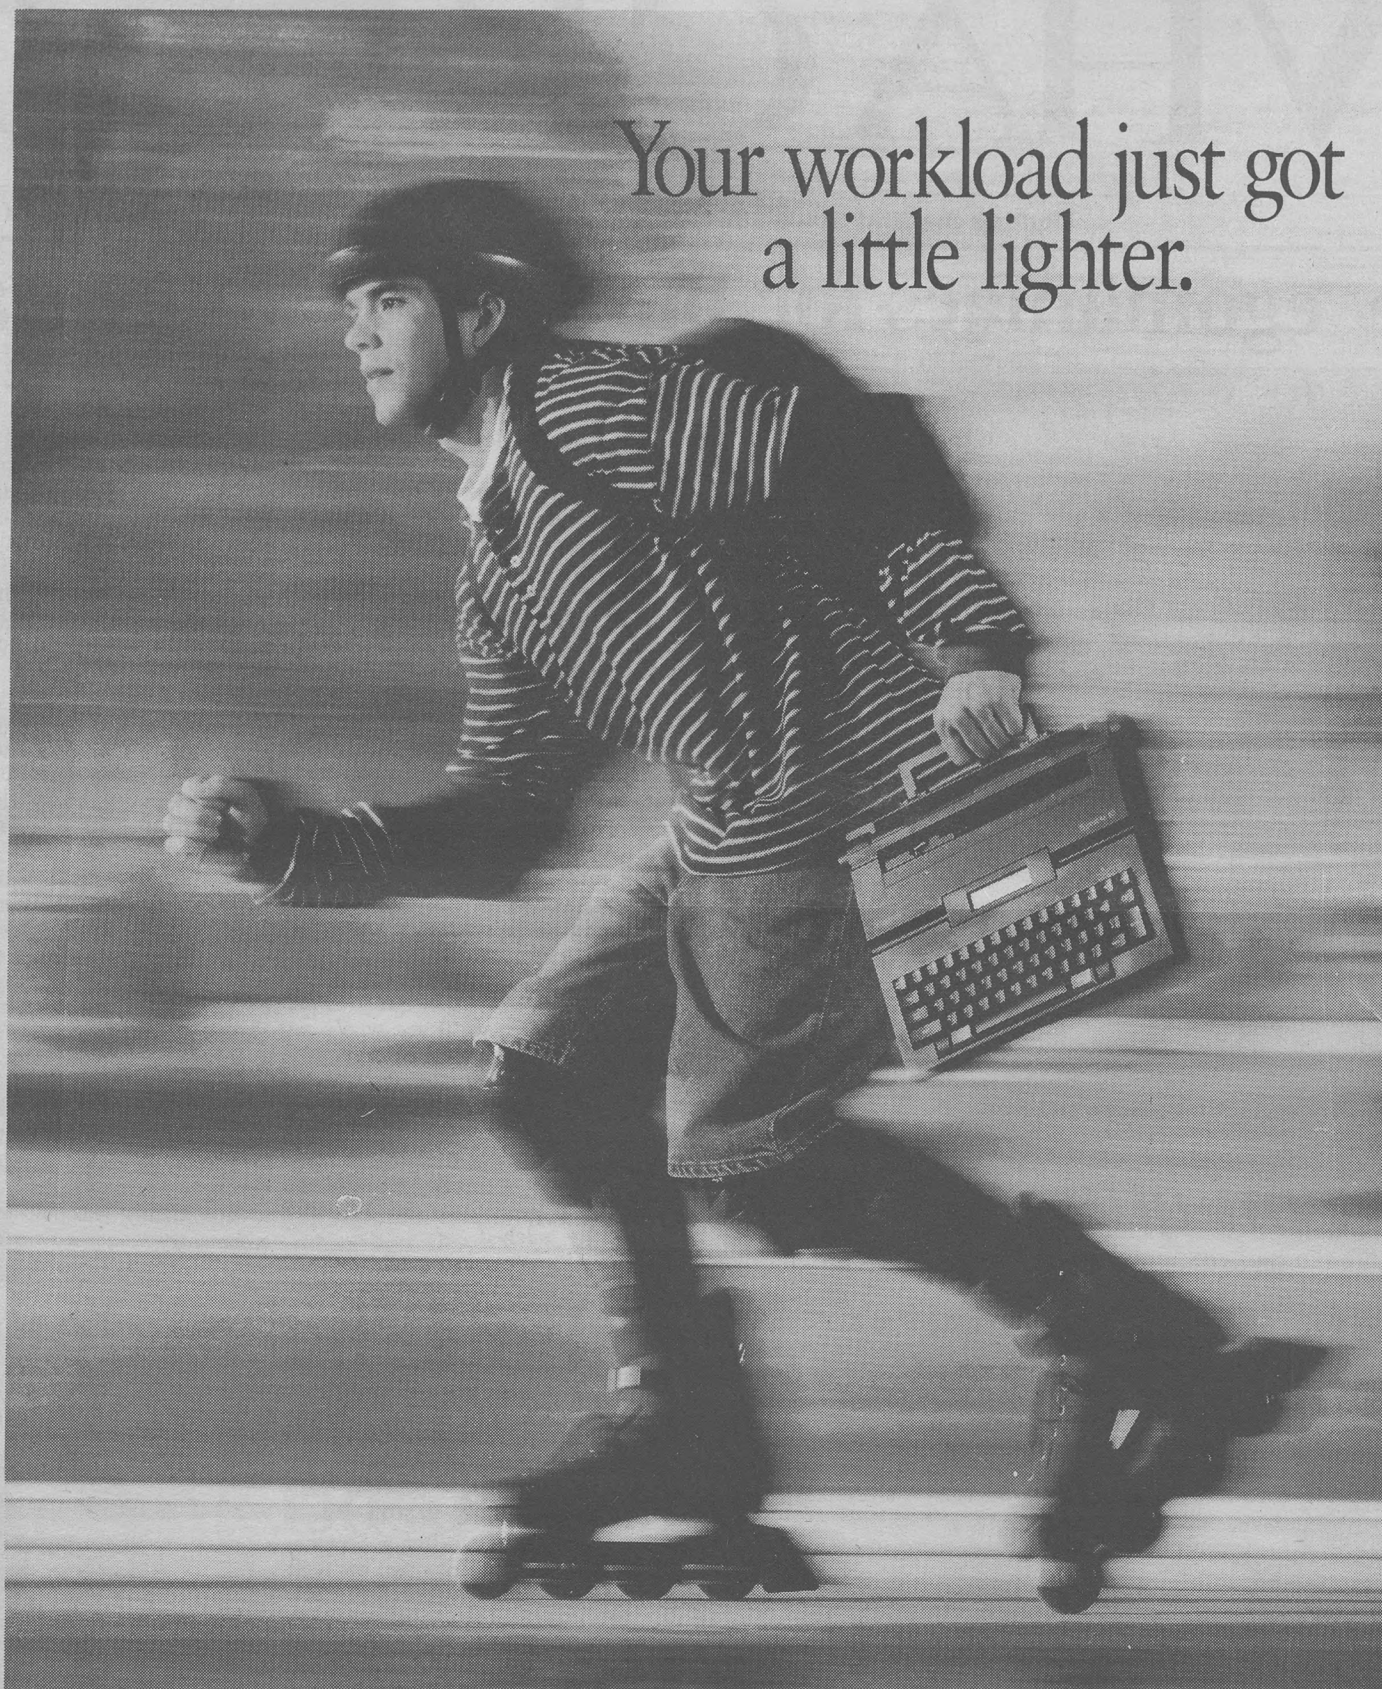

"On this one, the little residents of our kitchen have crossed way over the lines of decency," Cushion said.

Benign, however, denied previous political statements by his counterparts.

Billy Bob Slappinbird, the freshman who discovered the missing labor leader's nuts, said the addition was "flavorful" and was "an unusual delight." He added that he "was particularly surprised to find meaty chunks in his vegetarian specialty."

Upon entering the room, officers discovered a large building fitting the description of Mitchell Hall taking a huge bowl of crack.

"It was not Mitchell Hall," inspector James Dean Harsmell concluded after an in-depth and costly investigation.

Monday morning, officers cornered a student they suspected stole the building. The student allegedly produced a large sausage and smacked the pigs silly.

Staphurd said the officer, Manny Motta, 93, was rushed to the GW Hospital, where he was pronounced decrepit on arrival.

Staphurd said Fuzz Captain Antonio TacoGrande took a confession Tuesday morning. "The student, who was originally thought to be a man but later turned out to be a woman, admitted to stealing the dorm," TacoGrande said. "But he refused to disclose the whereabouts of the building."

TacoGrande said the student told officers that he was holding the building in his pocket. But a strip search of the she-man concluded that Mitchell is too large to fit in a pocket and that a person's pockets can't be searched if the person is naked.

The woman is being referred to Judicial Affairs, Staphurd said.

GW erects dorm on quad for bums

by Twisted Sister
Low Talker

In an effort to combat the freshman housing and D.C. homeless problem, the secretaries in the Office of Residential Death unveiled their plan to build a new dorm in the middle of the quad.

Administrators in the Office of Homeless Freshmen opposed the move. "Students sleeping in Hoovervilles in the quad is acceptable to us," said Sheila Blinds, executive director of nothing. The students have already remained outside for seven months protesting the lockout fee that never existed. "They'll get used to it," Blinds said.

Some students say they are perfectly content with the situation. "Hey, we'll be OK. We have MURPLE to watch over us," said freshman Shanna Moakler.

Forty-five of the 70 students left without housing threatened to set up rooms on the second and fourth floors of Rice Hall. This prompted OHF to contract with the Never Finish It Co. construction agency to build the 16-story building on the quad. WETA is expected to move into the building in 1983.

In a surprise move, the ANC protested the construction. A source not too close to Sarah Maddatus said the ANC commissioner said, "Screw you all! The issue is that our property value will go down!"

In an effort to appease the ANC commissioner and no one else in particular, Stupid Association Executive Veep-elect Scooter Slicka said he would drive on the solar car a.k.a. "Trouble 3" and illuminate the quad to allow pickpockets to better see their victims.

Trachtenturd applauded the decision-making skills of the ORD-OHF.

Executive Director of the Cubicle of Six Block Life LeNny Weak said, "In addition to all that, we had people who were or were not at various meetings, and so my sense is that as the group was working together coming from different perspectives," he said incomprehensibly. "I thought we were as a result of having participated in the vice president's staff meeting at which this was discussed at that time."

Homeless: 'Brother, can you spare some points?'

by Rutabaga Lover
Hates Meat

In a display of compassion rare in modern society, the GW administration, led by President Stefano George Tractorbutt, announced Tuesday that area homeless people will be placed on the meal card point system.

"We're sick of these damned street thugs scrounging for our every dollar," Office of Campus Life in the City Space Mooch LeNewmann Wrong said. "This had better prove once and for all that GW is not as heartless as everyone believes."

"I used to think bums were all a bunch of scumbags, but after giving them charity, I just feel, like, a special bond with them," said a flannel-shirted student from New Jersey. She added, however, that she still "gets queasy at the thought of touching any of them."

Another student called this a "love-hand-holding-VIVA for the homeless kind of event."

Some of the homeless said they are not impressed, though. "The food tastes like rat shit," said one homeless man, who added that he would rather live in the streets than "on that hellhole of a campus."

But Tractorbutt said eating rancid food "puts hair on you." He pointed to his mustached wife's upper lip for evidence.

Western Confucius Church Rev. Moon Wimberlee praised the GW program. "My God tells me that I have to feed people," he said. "Even if it's rat shit, they need to be fed."

Advisory Nincompoo Commission member Edward "Ted" Bundy Kelly said the new program is "a really foolish project. We at the ANC oppose anything with a shred of humanity."

University President Steven Joel Tractorbutt announced this week that he has commissioned GW Medical Center researchers to clone various campus administrators and basketball stars.

Jerry Corridor and Bob Stillwoman, who successfully cloned a human embryo last fall, confirmed the project. "It'll be big," said Corridor. "Before you know it there'll be more li'l swarthy bastards and really tall Nigerians tooling around campus than you can shake a stick at."

"There really needs to be more ego on this campus," Tractorbutt said in a phone interview from his private jet. "That's why I want those jerks at the med school to clone me. Add to that the cloning of Yinky Dahray, the star basketball player, and I can carry out my plan of world domination and go to the Final Four. Now we'll see who's on 'Regis and Kathy Lee!'"

To prepare for the cloning, Tractorbutt has been watching The Boys from Brazil over and over again, but seems to be ambivalent about retrieving Dahray. "Basketball? I made my token, 10-minute appearance at the last home game," he belched.

Late yesterday, a band of several law school students gathered outside Rice Hall to protest. Carrying signs reading "One of HIM is enough" and "Stop the insanity," the group shouted obscenities and threatened to "sick Banzhaf" on Tractorbutt. Reportedly, the erstwhile president stepped onto his balcony just long enough to yell "shut up, you water buffalo!"

In an exclusive Whack-It interview, Dr. Obi Wan Ben-Abraham (whom the Guinness Book of World Records dubbed the Smartest But Most Nearly Wacko Man in the World) said the project is a coverup for something much larger.

"It's all a front. They don't give a rat's ass about that Tractorbutt or Yinky. They want to clone John Kuester!"

"That's horse shit," said men's basketball head coach Spike Jarvis. "Yinky's just not mature enough to get cloned. I'd like to see him play another year before they clone him. Besides, it's against my religion to allow cloning."

"I envision flying monkeys — and plenty of 'em," Tractorbutt said about the possibility of combining cloning and genetic experiments.

John Candy was not available for comment.

Idiots heist dorm

Guy slaps cop silly as part of brouhaha

Hangs Out At Woodhull House

University Police said they were stumped Saturday after a Service-Meister employee reported the theft of Mitchell Hall's Courtyard Cafe.

"We just couldn't figure out where the fuck it could have gone," Chief Flatfoot Duhlorice Staphurd said.

The employee said the theft was part of an armed robbery. "I didn't see the guy who took the building, but he must have been pretty strong," the employee said.

Eight officers, along with Scooby Doo, were dispatched to the scene, Staphurd said. "The male subject allegedly produced a handgun. We obviously responded to the incident as a proactive measure."

Despite a scouring of the area and the help of KITT-2000, UPD Blue's new surveillance helicopter / escort van, officers were unable to locate the suspect or the missing building.

"We just sort of hid," officer Jerry Kurl said. "You never know when these guys could be packing heat."

"Per protocol, the officers, who

are armed with only their wits, their nightsticks and their own humongous asses, are instructed to look (for a suspect) a little, and then run away in fear," Staphurd said.

The situation was almost resolved shortly after midnight when officers responded to a separate call from a Munson Hall resident assistant who reported smelling the odor of crack cocaine being smoked.
